A COMSTOCK MILLINER.—During the past ten days there has been a tremendous rush on a certain milliner's store on C street, Virginia, and the other milliners have been dying with envy and racking their brains to discover the secret of such extraordinary success.
The store has been crowded day and night, and the shelves are now nearly bare. The secret came out this morning, and now all the other milliners are bappy. It seems that ten days ago the widow to whom the store belongs was suddenly called to San Francisco, and had no time to secure the services of a proper person to take charge during her absence from the city. The husband, an old man who has been on the Comstock for fifteen years and knows everything of women or their togery, lives over the store, and the widow, who expected to be gone but a day or two, begged him to look after the shop. The old gentleman consented willingly and did a rushing business. Four-dollar hats were sold for six bits. Valuable lace was for a song, and he disposed of ostrich feathers as they could be picked from every age-brush on Mount Davidson. The ladies trooped in in such numbers when the news of the amazing bargains to be had spread abroad that the old boy was astonished at the extent of the trade, and privately made up his mind to raise the rent of a woman who did such a business.
When the widow returned this morning and found her empty shelves and a light cash box, she is said to have fallen into hysterics, while the old gentleman was utterly dumfounded when he learned the real prices which lovely woman pays for her adornments, and which he should have charged. He immediately went off and got drunk.

LOVE WARMED OVER.—Some six months ago Mrs. Muckle obtained a divorce in Virginia from her husband Thomas Muckle. Since the legal separation Thomas has been a changed man, having abstained from all those bad practices which gave offence to Mrs. M.
Love revived in his heart and relying upon St. Paul's great maxim that "faint heart never won fair lady," Thomas laid aside to his former partner. She perceived that he had come to a realizing sense of the truth of Martin Farquhar Tupper's maxim that "evil communications corrupt good manners," and the consequence was that the two hearts beat as one again. Last evening they told the scratch and made a second start, Judge Cox giving the word.—[G. H.
News, 29th ult.]

The proprietor of a saloon had a live turtle that was destined to give flavor to a fine lunch. It was under the ice-box, and its powers of locomotion were supposed to be dormant. The old tapers were sitting by a table and mulling over their glasses. Suddenly the turtle, which had waddled from the ice-box, encountered a mass of leather under the table, and not having time to go around the obstruction started to climb over it.
The man within the boot looked down and turned pale. "Boys," he whispered, "take me home and send for a doctor. I've got 'em?"—[LaCrosse paper.]

The Indian character is unfortunately illustrated in the death of Rev. Archer Fennell at the Cheyenne missionary agency. A young Indian whom he had "converted" was put into jail for some offense, and swore he'd kill the first white man he met on getting out. Mr.
Fennell procured his discharge, and happened to be that "first white man."
The Indian kept his oath as sacredly as Jephthah did his similar one, and sent a bullet through his friend's brain.
